

Maximize Your Available Seating

Reinventing

our business model has us all scratching our heads as we move through this pandemic crisis. Here are some helpful ideas to consider as you embrace reopening to the general public.

How to Make the Most Out of Your Occupancy Limits.

When states start to reopen dining rooms, it is apparent that restaurants will need to reopen with guidelines from local and state governments in mind. Chances are the number of tables will need to be reduced in order to follow these new protocols. Make use of your patio no matter the weather, to make-up for the loss of indoor seating.

Protect your patio from unpredictable weather in a moments notice and get the most out of your dining space.

Quick Reference Guide for Reopening Dining Service

- Follow your local and state guidelines for reopening.
- Post signage at the entrance stating no one with a fever or symptoms of COVID-19 can enter the restaurant.
- Update floor plans for common dining areas, redesigning seating arrangements to ensure at least six feet of separation between table setups.
- Design a process so guests stay separated while waiting for seating.
- Limit party size at tables to no more than the established "maximum approved" as recommended by CDC or approved by local and state government.
- Social distancing measures based on square footage should take into account service and guest areas.
- If practical, physical barriers such as partitions or plexiglas at registers are acceptable.
- Use technology where possible to reduce person-to-person interaction, including mobile ordering, menu tablets, texts on arrival for seating, and contactless payment.
- Determine ingress/egress to and from restrooms to establish paths that mitigate proximity for guests and staff.
- Consider an exit from the facility separate from the entrance.
